Mr. Taft, who spoke extemporaneously and took up conservation of natural resources as his theme, said:

"I am glad to announce that I have just learned that the railroad bill has passed the Senate."

The president declared that in conservation, as in other matters of government, it is meassary to be practical. There are no altruists in this country or any others who are going to invest their money merely to gratify a theory, he said.

Early to-day the presidential party will go to Monroe to attend the unveiling of an equestrian statue of General George A. Custer, who was killed by Sioux Indians with all his men at the battle of the Little Big Horn in 1876. From Mouroe the president will go to Jackson, Mich., to participate this afternoon in the dedication of a tablet commemorative of the organization of the Republicae party at Jackson in June, 1854.
